Allowable Subject Matter

1. Claims 23-31 are allowed.
2. The following is an examiner's statement of reasons for allowance:

The invention is directed to an optical device includes a transparent material layer having a desired curved surface configuration, a layer including a variable refractive index material having a dielectric constant anisotropy, at least two transparent electrodes arranged to sandwich the transparent material layer and the variable refractive index material, and a driving device supplying a AC voltage including driving frequencies f_1 and f_2 between the transparent electrodes. The dielectric constant anisotropy is positive at one of the driving frequencies and negative at the other driving frequency.

Independent claim 23 identifies, inter alia, the uniquely distinct features "wherein the AC voltage is applied during a frequency range corresponding to the positive dielectric constant anisotropy or during a frequency range corresponding to the negative dielectric constant anisotropy" and "wherein longer axes of the molecules of the variable refractive index material are aligned along the electric field when applying a larger amplitude of the AC voltage according to the positive dielectric constant anisotropy, and the longer axes of the molecules of the variable refractive index material are aligned perpendicular to the electric field when applying a smaller amplitude of the AC voltage according to the negative dielectric constant anisotropy."

Sakata (US 5,299,037) teaches a diffraction grating type liquid crystal display device in a viewfinder. Particularly, the two layers of Sakata each has a different orientation that is based on the type of variable refractive index material (i.e. having negative or positive dielectric anisotropy) used. Sakata does not teach driving an AC voltage across the layers and no mention of any specific frequency ranges. Sakata only teaches varying the orientation of the molecules by simply turning on or off the electric field. Thus, Sakata does not teach above claimed features.

Any comments considered necessary by applicant must be submitted no later than the payment of the issue fee and, to avoid processing delays, should preferably accompany the issue fee. Such submissions should be clearly labeled "Comments on Statement of Reasons for Allowance."
